Community

Providing a climate for open and honest discussion, questions, and concerns will create an environment for professional growth and reflection in which both preceptor and intern can thrive.

One of the roles of the preceptor is to coach the candidate so their strengths can be developed in a supportive environment in order to grow as a professional. Encourage the intern to analyze his/her own strength development and to identify how they will be able to utilize their 5 strengths during the upcoming rotation. Research shows people who work to reinforce their strengths are more confident, more positive, and more productive and have more direction in their lives.

The following questions/discussions will help to facilitate strength growth during this rotation.

Interns should bring a hardcopy for discussion and documentation at the start of each new major rotation in clinical, community and management. If desired, the intern can complete the document multiple times during a rotation when working with a new preceptor. This document should be submitted in the Portal at the beginning of each major rotation along with any additional professional expectation documents completed with additional preceptors.
